Nousishing a Spirit Bary.—there 's a schoolmarm down east who has a phantem scholar, you've all heard whout. But a Southern lady was in this city last week who has a spirit baby. Four months ago she lost a child of five months. She is a delicate, fragile creature, and the loss of her baby nearly lilled her. Four days after the little creature's death, and just at dusk, she became aware of something pulling at her dress, and there was her little baby back upon her bosom. From that time to this the baby comes back to be nursed as the evening shadows fall. She cannot see it, but she feels its little hands paddling about, as babies will, and those around her can see her dress disarranged, her collar pulled, and the indentations on her bosom made by the invisible fingers of the spirit baby. Her physician is staggered. There is no alteration in her physical condition; everything goes on as if she was nourishing a living child. The lady is not a spiritualist, is excessively refined and aristocratic, and she shrinks from making the phenomenon public, but every night she cralles in her arms her intangible baby. She feels its unseen mouth warm seainst her, and she bends with bitter She feels its unseen mouth warm against her, and she bends with bitter tears above the invisible little visitant.— N. Y. Cor. St. Louis Globe,

A SINGULAR thing has transpired in Bridgeport, Conn. Mr. George Poole, in exhaming the the remains of his grand-mother, Mrs. Abigail Poole, who was buried nineteen years ago, discovered that the body had petrified. A singular thing in connection with this remarkable discovery is that the cords of the neck were loose and pliable, and in raising the body from the grave the head hung over backward. The box and coffin had gone entirely to decay, and the grave partly filled with water, which had to be bailed out before the body was reached. Mrs. Poole was eighty-nine pears and five months old at the time of her death.

The Norway Maelstrom, of the old school books—as most people know al-ready—is a my th. At certain stages of the tide these is something like a whirl-poole, and in bad weather the place is a poole, and in bad weather the place is a dangerous one, even for large vessels; but if these are wrecked it is by being deshed among the rocks, or by foundering—not by being drawn down into a vortex. In 1859, an official report on the subject was made by Mr. Hagerup, Minister of the Norwegian Marine, who says that more violent currents of the kind are to be found at other points on the coast of Norway, but the worst of them is not so bad as the Maelstrom of the old stories.

For I'rs Father's Sake.—Mark Twain, a few mouths after his first baby was born, was holding it on his knee. His wife said, "Now confess, Samuel, that you have the child!" "I can't do that," replied the humorist, "but am willing to admit that I respect the little thing for its father's sake."
